

Shape your child's education. Draw the lines!

5 Steps to Making Your Child's Education Count

New district maps of your community determine what resources are distributed to your child's schools. You can shape your child's education through helping draw new lines. New lines are drawn from how you define your community.

1. Get connected!

The NALEO Educational Fund is a nonprofit nonpartisan organization whose mission is to support the participation of Latinos in the LAUSD redistricting process.

- Finding experts in redistricting can help you get more information about your local redistricting process.

2. Get informed!

Attend a NALEO Educational Fund training and learn more information important for the community, how to testify in a public hearing and review the timeline for the LAUSD redistricting process.

3. Prepare your testimony.

A redistricting testimony describes your community's common characteristics and your preferences for new district lines.

- Your testimony is your story about your community. You are the expert.

4. Testify!

The LAUSD redistricting commission will hold public hearings to listen to LAUSD parents and community members on how they want district lines drawn.

- You are your child's voice.

5. Spread the word!

Children need a strong voice in the redistricting process. Parents can be that strong voice.

- Bring your friends to a training by NALEO Educational Fund, a public hearing, or have them contact NALEO Educational Fund directly.
